

LYCOMING COLLEGE REPORT

November 1981

Annual weekend draws parents

Lycoming's annual Parents' Weekend, held this year on Oct. 9-11, appears to be something of a jinx to the football team. For the third consecutive year, the Warriors went down to defeat in front of their parents.

Otherwise, the weekend ran as planned with no disrupting surprises. It opened Friday afternoon with registration for parents from 4 to 6 p.m. in Burchfield Lounge of Wertz Student Center.

Registration continued Friday from 7:30 to 10 p.m. at the library entrance to the Academic Center. Simultaneously from 8 to 10 p.m., the annual fall reception for parents was held in the library and Pennington Lounge of the Academic Center. It drew another large turnout of parents, students, faculty members, and administrators. That same evening, the musical review, "Unsung Cole," opened a six-day run in the Arena Theatre. The revue, which featured Cole Porter's lesser-known works and some of his classics, is the Arena's entry in the American College Theatre Festival.

Parents registered again Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to noon in Burchfield Lounge. Brunch was served in the college dining room from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Many parents of choir members attended an open choir rehearsal at 10 a.m. in Clarke Chapel. Others watched the held hockey team defeat Juniata, 2-1, in a 10:30 a.m. match.

The Lycoming-Delaware Valley football game kicked off at 1:30 p.m. at College Field. The Aggies, defending their Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division championship, duplicated their 1980 win over the Warriors on Parents' Weekend, beating Lycoming, 12-3.

After the game at 6:30 p.m., a Roman Catholic mass was celebrated by the Rev. John Tamalis, chaplain to Roman Catholic students on campus, in St. John Neumann Chapel in the Clarke Building. Also at 6:30 and 7:30 p.m. Dr. Richard R. Erickson, assistant professor of astronomy and physics, presented his popular "Sky Shows in the Dretwiler Planetarium."

Parents, faculty members and students gathered at the annual reception in Pennington Lounge.

The music department's annual faculty-student recital featuring new works by faculty members, was held Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Clarke Chapel. It was followed at 8:30 p.m. by a concert in the college dining room, featuring "Changing Lanes," a three-piece jazz, country, and bluegrass group, and another performance of "Unsung Cole" in the theatre.

Roman Catholic masses were held Sunday at 9, 10, and 11 a.m. At 10:15 a.m. a social hour was hosted by the Rev. Jerry Eischied, campus minister, in the foyer of Clarke Chapel. A Service for Christian Celebration followed the social hour at 11 a.m. in Clarke Chapel.

Trustees adopt budget, re-elect President, approve gym renovation

Lycoming's Board of Trustees adopted the college's largest-ever operating budget for 1981-82, re-elected the President, and approved renovating old Hilltop Gymnasium into a fine arts center at its annual fall meeting on Oct. 30. Chairman W. Gibbs McKenney, of Baltimore presided over the meeting in the Long Administration Building conference room.

The 1981-82 operating budget of $6,079,903 is $688,812 more than the 1980-81 budget, or equal to a 17.1 percent increase. It reflects a 6.8 percent increase in student enrollment and the 15 percent increase in tuition for 1981-82 that was announced earlier this year.

Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, President, was re-elected unanimously. Renewed at the fall meeting of the board the position operates on a one-year contract. Dr. Blumer is now in his sixth year at Lycoming; he is the 12th man to hold the post.

With its approval to renovate the old gymnasium, which was closed last fall when the new physical education center opened, the board directed two of its committees, grounds and buildings and finance, to review architectural plans and to develop a way to finance the renovation.

Indeed, the board instructed the two committees to develop several renovation and financing alternatives for it to review at its next meeting.

Cost of the renovation is estimated at up to $700,000, although for $100,000 to $200,000 Lycoming could make sufficient renovations to allow the art department to move into and use the building.

In the meantime, building and maintenance crews are expected to begin preparing the building for renovation by tearing out or moving partitions and walls and completing other pre-renovation work. Actual renovations probably won't begin until the spring or summer of 1982.

As envisioned, the new arts center will include modern and expansive studios, a sculpture foundry, a theatre arts workshop, offices, and classrooms. Currently, there is no sculpture foundry on campus and the studios are located in the old Fine Arts I and II buildings on the northwest corner of the quadrangle. Both buildings have been deemed inadequate, possibly unsafe, to house future art programs. One of the buildings is the former college president's home.

In other action, the board directed its chairman to appoint a committee to develop a system to evaluate the performance of the college administration. The committee also is expected to draw up the guidelines on which to base job performance, and to supervise the eventual evaluator.

Before re-electing the President, the board heard a report from him that emphasizes the need for Lycoming to begin exploring ways to help those students with the need for financial aid to meet their needs without relying so heavily on federal aid.

Dr. Blumer stressed the importance of analyzing this problem because of Lycoming's dependence on tuition generated through the various types of aid granted to needy students, much of which comes from student-aid programs being cut by the Reagan administration. Although it is not yet known what impact these cuts will have on Lycoming's students, the President said the college must be prepared to fill in any gaps in financial aid if it wants to attract and retain certain students needing aid.

The President also noted the 6.8 percent increase in 1981-82 enrollment. The increase, he said, is the result of three consecutive years of larger freshmen classes and reduced attrition in all classes, not simply a much larger Class of 1985.

The trustees also heard a report by Trustee John E. Person, Jr., of the grounds and buildings committee, that listed a variety of maintenance projects completed on campus during the past summer. Among the projects were the installation of new rocks on the Science Building and Grever Hall, the resurfacing of the College Field tennis courts, and the repair of the Long Hall clock tower. He also said that the committee has received the report from the two Conoco, Inc., engineers who completed an energy audit of Lycoming early in the fall. That report will

Development post filled

Paul C. Hassenplug, formerly president and general manager of the Northeast New York Educational Television Association, has assumed the position of Director of Institutional Planning and Development at Lycoming.

Hassenplug's post will include institutional planning, fund raising, and coordination of the alumni and public relations offices of the college. He succeeds George P. Flini, former director of institutional relations.

Lycoming College is fortunate to attract such an experienced and successful development officer, said Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, President. "Paul Hassenplug has accomplished great things wherever he has served, and we look forward to even greater achievements at Lycoming. As the chief executive officer of the Plattsburgh-based television association, Hassenplug, 44, was responsible for the total operation of television station WCCE-TV, Ch. 57. Located on the Plattsburgh State University College campus, WCCE was organized, built, and began operation

Faculty focus: Janet Rodgers, nursing chairman

by Welles B. Lobb, Ass't Editor

Attracted to Locomyng by the challenge of developing a new academic program from scratch, Dr. Janet A. Rodgers, the college's first chairman of nursing, is busily preparing for Locomyng's initial nursing class, scheduled to enroll in September.

Rodgers is a big job — nursing is projected to grow into one of Locomyng's most in-demand majors — and a variety of problems still need to be resolved before the curriculum she is designing meets the stringent standards of both the college and state.

My biggest problem has not been the organizing of what I think is a good, academically-sound nursing curriculum," said Rodgers, who has taught in or administered four other baccalaureate programs. Instead, she said, a greater task has been trying to translate the proposed curriculum for faculty committees in a way that can both be understood and appreciated — and ultimately approved.

Faculty acceptance is the first step, the second is authorization from the Pennsylvania State Board of Nurse Examiners. Rodgers hopes to submit Locomyng's proposed curriculum to the state in December for action by the board in late January.

Until the curriculum is approved, Locomyng is prohibited from actively recruiting nursing students, faculty or staff. But when the college's program is in full swing, it is expected to enroll 70-80 new students each year and to employ 12 to 15 faculty members.

Despite the demands and occasional frustrations of her new position, the native of nearby Watonsontown is quick to smile and laugh. Setting up a curriculum, she quipped, "is a long process, and one that takes a great deal of patience and, most of all, a sense of humor."

In preparing a curriculum, Rodgers said, she relies primarily on her knowledge and experiences from the past in addition to her classroom and administrative background in colleges and universities, she has had experience with accrediting nursing programs, both as an accreditation visitor and as a member of the Board of Review of the National League for Nursing, and has served as a nursing consultant since 1979. Rodgers, who taught last spring as a visiting associate professor at the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing, is a former chairperson of the nursing program at Old Dominion University.

Rodgers holds a Ph.D. in nursing research and an M.A. in psychiatric-mental health nursing from New York University, and a B.S. in nursing from Wagner College.

Dr. Janet A. Rodgers

Her other scholarly and professional credentials include many publications and memberships in numerous nursing associations. She has risen to her position from an unpretentious beginning, following graduation from Wagner in 1957, she worked for four years as a staff nurse and head nurse at the New York State Psychiatric Institute.

The four-year baccalaureate program, Rodgers believes, is the only sound route for entry level into professional nursing practice. "Nursing," she said, "must be like any other professional program, housed in an institution of higher learning rather than in a service agency."

Because of what she calls the "liberalizing effect" of a college education, Rodgers said, college-prepared nurses "are really much more well-rounded human beings who are able to deal with all kinds of people on any level of health care."

Graduates of Locomyng's program will be awarded the bachelor of science in nursing degree. With that diploma, they will be prepared to take the state board examination leading to licensure as registered nurses.

The renowned strength of Locomyng's biology and chemistry departments portend a good start for nursing at Locomyng.

"Nursing leans very heavily on the basic sciences, and we're fortunate to have a number of very strong departments, including chemistry and biology," said Rodgers.

When Janet Rodgers leaves her office in the Academic Center and goes home, she unwinds by reading and cooking. But between her husband's schedule, and the triumphs, defeats and aggravations of piecing together a major academic program, she says she finds little time for the latter anymore.

The chairman is married to Dr. Terry Rodgers, a practicing psychoanalyst in Norfolk, Va. They are the parents of three daughters.

'Outstanding Economics Alumnus' named

Glenn L. Stevens '68, a senior vice president for the Farm Credit Banks of Baltimore, was honored as Locomyng's first "Outstanding Economics Alumnus" at a dinner Oct. 8 in Wertz Student Center.

Stevens, a native of State College, received the award from Dr. Robert W. Rabold, professor of economics and department chairman. The award will be presented periodically by Locomyng.

As senior vice president in charge of finance and administration, Stevens is responsible for the development and execution of major financial, personnel, and administrative policies, plans, and controls. He joined the credit system, which is a major agricultural lender, in 1971, and has filled a variety of positions since then.

The son of a former Pennsylvania State University faculty member, Stevens also holds M.B.A. and Master of Finance degrees from Loyola College. He has taught at York College of Pennsylvania, and is a member of the American Society of Personnel Administration. Stevens lives with his wife, Bonnie, and three-year-old daughter, Leslie, in Shrewsbury.

In addition to receiving the award while on campus,

Stevens spoke to several economics classes and consented to an interview with the Locomyng College Report. Excerpts from his address to the classes and from the interview are combined in the story that follows.

I have competed with students from other colleges, and I have always felt that I have gotten a top education."

So said Glenn L. Stevens '68, Locomyng's first "Outstanding Economics Alumnus," in comparing his Locomyng education with that of other colleges.

As senior vice president of the Farm Credit Banks of Baltimore, Stevens credits Locomyng with launching him on his way toward a successful career.

"I believe that the first cornerstone of an agenda for success is the acquisition of a broad, quality liberal education," he said. "Liberal education provides a base everyone needs to have. I have continued to be amazed, time after time, how that base of general knowledge has provided a frame of reference for the experiences and decisions that have to be made in business."

Indeed, Stevens said, without this liberal education he would not consider himself an educated person, even though he holds two other advanced business degrees.

Of course, Stevens added, a college degree is not a ticket to success. It is just one of the variables that contribute to success, albeit a very important variable.

"It is the preparation for a lifetime of learning," Stevens said.

There are at least three other cornerstones for success, the banker believes.

Technical ability, or the acquisition of skills and abilities that allow a person to perform a specific job, is the second cornerstone, he said. For a business student, taking courses in accounting, financial management, quantitative methods, communications, and computer science will provide this technical ability.

As the third cornerstone, Stevens places experience. "There simply is no substitute for this attribute," he said. "It can't be learned in a book. For the most part it can't be taught, and you can't buy it anywhere."

Skills are developed only through experience, he said. Stevens' final cornerstone for success is the development of management and interpersonal skills.

"The toughest work you will experience in your career will relate to the area of people problems," he said. To develop these types of skills, Stevens recommends taking courses in management science, personnel management, and supervision.

What differences has Stevens noticed in recent college graduates when compared with their predecessors?

New graduates are better prepared technically, he said, but they are not as well trained in the liberal arts (writing, speaking, reasoning skills).

No matter what the undergraduate education, though, Stevens said, "future career success will require a commitment to further education. Graduation from Locomyng is not the end of your education. It is only the beginning."

Fortunately for Locomyng's students, he said, it is a very good beginning.

In March, 1977, under his direction, The station, licensed to the nonprofit association, served the Plattsburgh-Burlington-Vt. market and adjacent parts of Canada.

Before managing the television association, Hassenplug was director of development for the Public Broadcasting Council of Central New York in Syracuse from 1969 to 1975. He was development director at Rochester Institute of Technology from 1965 to 1969, and director of alumni relations at RIT from 1959 to 1965. During his tenure as alumni director, he was responsible for the alumni phase of the $18.8 million RIT New Campus Fund. He is a 1959 graduate of RIT's School of Printing.

Hassenplug was active in numerous Plattsburgh community groups, including the Rotary Club. The Johnstown native also is a member of the National Society of Fund Raising Executives, a trustee of the Eastern Educational Television Network, and an active church layman.

The new development director has moved to Williamsport with his wife, the former Gretchen Schlecht, of Syracuse, and their four children from Peru, N.Y.

Football

4-4

"We recommitted ourselves and told ourselves 'it's going to be tough, but let's start a new season, a second half of the season."

"We can go 5-0 in the second half of the season. It's not going to be easy, but we can do it."

That's what Lycoming football coach Frank Girardi told his players at mid-season when the Warriors were 1-4, discouraged, and seemingly headed for a losing season.

Well, fans, take notice. Lycoming is coming back.

Following an 11-10 upset win over Juniata in late October, the Warriors evened their record at 4-4. After losing to Delaware Valley (12-3) on Parents' Weekend, Lycoming has responded by defeating Upsala (22-14), Dickinson (36-0), and Juniata (11-10), a team that was previously unbeaten in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division. November wins over Albright and Fairleigh Dickinson can lift Lycoming to its seventh consecutive winning season.

If you don't have an All-American quarterback to run your show, you find other means. Lycoming is doing it with tenacity, perseverance and courage.

Against Juniata, a statistically superior opponent, the Warriors were locked in a stalemate for the first 58 minutes. Then Juniata struck with a 97-yard pass-play touchdown. Undaunted, the Warriors, employing their "two-minute offense," scored their only TD of the afternoon with 1:15 remaining when wide receiver Jeff Wert (Stroudsburg), who is only 5-8, squeezed between two Juniata defenders and pulled down quarterback Pete Waldron's (Leonardo, N.J.) pass in the end zone. Lycoming then went for a two-point conversion and made it when Waldron, as he was being tackled, floated a pass into the outstretched hands of tight end John Betz (Havertown). Lycoming 11, Juniata 10, in a classic outbreak of "Lycomania."

Several college records have been broken in recent weeks. Wert's almost unbelievable end-zone catch against Juniata put the speedy junior in the record book as Lycoming's career TD reception leader with 12. He has surpassed teammate Mike Burd (Lock Haven), whose senior season has been cut short by a bout of mononucleosis. A week earlier at Dickinson, Wert became the Warriors' career reception leader with 72, breaking the previous mark shared by Jim Smith (1967-70) and Pete Onorati (1971-74). Hard-running junior tailback Mike Santoleri (Berwyn), Lycoming's top rusher this fall, became the Warriors' career scoring leader with 102 points when he tallied his fifth TD of the campaign at Dickinson. Robbi Bleistein (1976-79), a kicker, held the old mark of 98 points.

Although it took Lycoming eight Saturdays to reach the 500 mark, the struggle for parity was no fault of the defense, which continually has turned in outstanding performances under the disadvantage of spending large amounts of time on the field. The 76.4 yards a game rushing the Warriors are allowing ranks the unit in the top 10 of the NCAA's 188 Division III football-playing institutions. According to defensive coordinator Steve Wiser, the performance by the 1981 defensive unit has been the most satisfying of all his previous teams. The Warriors have continued to play excellently despite the graduation of three backs and two linebackers from last fall's unit.

Women's Tennis

Lycoming's Oct. 28 appearance in the Middle Atlantic Conference championship match — the first such for any Warrior women's team — was less than impressive, but coach Deb Holmes still was happy her team got that far. And she expects to be back, and ready to play more competitively next year.

Although shutout 9-0 by Johns Hopkins in the MAC title match in Baltimore, Lycoming still turned in its best season on the courts since 1975, and its best under Holmes, who has guided the squad for the past six years. Looking at the bright side of the season-ending loss, Holmes said, "It gives us something to work for next year."

And next year, Lycoming's top three singles players will be returning. They are junior Kim Paul (Cambridge, Md.), sophomore Deanna Cappel (Wappingers Falls, N.Y.), and freshman Stacy Wolf (Ridgewood, N.J.). Each recorded a 6-3 singles record this fall.

Holmes loses only her No. 4 singles player, Isabel VanDeusen (Westfield, N.J.), and a No. 3 doubles player, Betsy Rabold (Williamsport) to graduation.

The pivotal match of the season was a 5-4 win over Scranton, the Warriors' primary competition for the MAC Northern Division title. Lycoming then qualified for the championship match with a division-clinching 7-0 win over Wilkes on Oct. 13.

Soccer

"I wish we were only halfway through the season," said Lycoming soccer coach Scott McNeill after his young but maturing team wrapped up the autumn season with a succession of impressive performances during the final two weeks of the campaign.

In the span, the Warriors beat Albright (2-1) on a last-minute goal, and shut out Delaware Valley (4-0) and Baptist Bible (2-0) — a team that entered the match with a 13-2 record. The only blemish in the period was a loss to perennial power Elizabethtown, which broke a 1-1 tie in the final minutes. Overall, the Warrior's 5-6-1 mark was an improvement over last year's 3-7-1 record.

McNeill cites an improved offense as the force behind Lycoming's late uprising. Before getting untracked, Lycoming was shut out in five of its first eight matches.

The coach mentions four talented freshmen whose improvements parallel the team's: center-forward Tom McCartney (Basking Ridge, N.J.), who netted a team-leading six goals and assisted on six others; wing John Ernst (Doylestown), whose three assists placed him second to McCartney for team leadership; goalie Ken Bozzi (Florham Park, N.J.), who recorded three shutouts and a stingy 2.6 goals-allowed average against strong competition; and center halfback Greg Helback (Nanuet, N.Y.). The four are contenders for all-Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division recognition, according to McNeill.

Thirteen players in all contributed scores or assists. Senior center-forward John Cahill (Miami, Fla.) came up with a hat trick against King's; McCartney chipped in four assists in the same match. McCartney scored two times in a single game twice, and sophomore halfback Remberto Eugenides (Closter, N.J.) managed the same feat once.

Field Hockey

A 2-1 win over Juniata on Parents' Weekend was the bright spot in an otherwise disappointing season for Louise Courtney's field hockey team. The lack of a consistent offense, partially accountable to a series of injuries to the halfbacks, hurt the Warriors throughout the year.

Following the Juniata win during which junior Barb Heim (Pleasantville, N.Y.) scored twice, the team dropped decisions to Wilkes (5-0), Juniata (3-0), and Delaware Valley (4-0). The Warriors picked up a late-season 1-1 tie with Mansfield State.

Several players were vying in early November for advancements in regional competitions for the honor of playing in the United States Field Hockey Association national tournament in Orlando, Fla., on Nov. 26-29. Last year, goalie Robin Wert (Stroudsburg) was the Mid-East netminder at nationals. Wert, a junior who turned back a sparkling 88 percent of shots against her during the regular season, hopes to qualify again for the championship round.

be used as a guide to making the college more energy efficient in the future.

The board's various other committees also met prior to the full board meeting. The only major item brought before the full board for action was a proposal to grant full departmental status to mass communications, which has been an interdisciplinary major crossing over into several other departments. That proposal was approved and Dr. Malthon M. Anapol, professor of mass communications, named as its chairman.

The Board of Trustees will meet next on April 23.

Lycoming got a taste of Chinese culture in late September when the Youth Goodwill Mission of Taiwan, Republic of China, visited the campus for a couple of days.

The mission, which includes 14 college students, a director, deputy director, and stage manager, presented "An Adventure in Chinese Songs and Dance" as the highlight of its stay. The colorful, four-part performance featured Chinese classical and folk dances and the martial arts, particularly ch'uan (Chinese boxing). The performance was held in Clarke Chapel.
